ALTGELD'S ANARCHISTIC MESSAGE.

THE PEOPLE DISAGREE WITH HIM.

From The Chicago Tribune. The people of Illinois do not think with their Anarchist Governor that "the ground is being dug from under some of the foundations of the State." They feel at case. They are not a armed for the safety of their local self-government or their free institutions. They repudiate and disown emphatically the sentiments, half-Anarchistic venem and half-drivelling cant of the Governor.

DEBS IS SAFE, AT LEAST.

From The Providence News. Governor Altgeld is leaking at the mouth again His message to the Illinois Legislature offered a grand opportunity to express himself on the great railroad strike, and to cry out against what he was pleased to call a "Government by injunction." Meanwhile Debs is in jai.

MADNESS AS TO LABOR QUESTIONS.

From The Chicago Evening Post. The labor troubles are too much for him. That way madness lies for the Governor. The twenty-three "labor" pages may be peruged by the reader at his leisure. They have the importance of being curious, and clizens will find room for thought in them—twenty-three pages of room.

ANARCHISTS WILL APPROVE From The Boston Journal. Anarchist Aligeld, in his message as Governor of Hilnots, dehounces law and government after his kind. His sentiments will be warmly approved by all brother Anarchists.

HIS LAST MESSAGE. From The Commercial Advertiser. Altgeld, the Anarchist Governor of Illinois, has served his last message on the disgusted people of his State, and will be allowed to sink into the oblivion which he so richly merits. Not even the unprincipled Democracy, ready to fuse with the foes of the Nation, will have the audacity to nominate Altgeld for office again.

crowd back, and made a passage for the people who wished to enter the church. The galleries and seats at the right and left of the middle aisle were reserved for specially invited guests and the mourn-ers. The coffin rested in the vestibule of the church, at the right of the entrance. It was covered with flowers. Four wreaths of lilles of the valley and blush roses were laid upon it. These represented the four children of the dead woman. Hanging from the handle at the head of the coffin was an immense wreath of white roses from Mr. Astor, and from the silver handle at the foot was a cross made of the same flowers.

Mr. Astor arrived at the chapel shortly before 11:30 o'clock, and was shown into a private room, where he greeted the members of the Paul family who had come from Philadelphia to attend the funeral. None of the Asters were present, but J. oleman Drayton came in at the last minute, and took a seat in a rear pew. His presence was noticed

The crowd outside of the chapel behaved in a disgraceful manner. The women fairly fought for admission to the chapel, and the police seemed helpiess. Mr. Meurer, the sexton, expostulated with the throng of Sixth-ave, shoppers until he lost all patience. Then he ordered that the doors be closed. The police cleared the churchyard and made the crowd stand back. At 11:45 o'clock Dr. Dix. Bishop Potter and the Rev. Dr. William H. Vibbert slowly walked down the aisle to he front door, while the choir sang the processional hymn, "Hark, Hark, My Soul." Six men lifted up the heavy coffin and carried it up the aisle to the altar, the three clergymen and the members of the Paul family following. These were James W. Paul, James W. Paul, Jr., Dr. James Paul, Laurence T. Paul and J. R. Paul. Behind them came Miss Zela Gibbs, Mr. and Mrs Dahlgren, the Chanler family and Mrs. Joseph W. Drexel. Directly behind the coffin walked Mr. leaning upon the arm of James Paul, father of the dead woman. The pallbearers preceded the mourners and walked on either side of the coffin. They were John Steward, jr., Adrian Iselin, jr., Colonel A. D. Krumbhaar, Andrew Gray, Charles A. Pea-body, Jr., Hamilton Fish, Arthur Biddle and C.

The choir sang "Lord, Let Me Know My End," and, after the second lesson, which was read by Bishop Potter, the hymn "Nearer, My God, to Thee" was sung. While this was being sung, Mr. Astor bowed his head and the tears ran down his cheeks.

bowed his head and the tears ran down his cheeks. Many of the speciators were affected also. Gilbert's anthem. "I Heard a Voice from Heaven." was sung by the choir. The recessional hymn was "Jerusalem the Golden. At the end of the services the body was taken to Trinity Cemetery for burfal. This took place in the William Waldorf Astor lot, which is about twenty-five feet from the vault of William B. Astor. Here again a curious crowd of women had gathered. Three police officers kept them in order. A grave had been du; in the frosty ground, and four men dressel in blue gowns stood with their shovels ready to cast in the earth which was piled up by the side of the grave. Mr. Aster stood by the Letters were read which had been received by Mrs. Le Duc after the visit of Lady Franklin in June, 1850, and the life and characteristics of the great explorer's wife were related by the speaker in a manner which charmed her hearers. Miss Eugene M. Ferrer sang and played most acceptably. Following the programme tea was poured by Miss Miller and Miss Bessie Miller, cousins of the hostess.

MR. IRVING AS KING ARTHUR.

London, Jan 12 .- "King Arthur," Comyns Carr's play in blank verse, was produced at the Lyceum Theatre this evening, with Mr. Irving as King Arthur, Miss Terry as Guinevere and Mr. Robertson as Lancelot. The scenery and costumes, designed by Burne-Jones, are exquisite. The incidental music, by Burne-Jones, are exquisite.

by Sir Arthur Sadivan, is pretty, the choruses being especially line. The first two acts dragged, containing tedious speeches which need cutting. The last act also is overlong. The performance was received enthusiastically, and at its close Mr. Irving made a brief speech of thanks, in the audience were the Duke and Duchess of York and many persons prominent in society.

The bill as indorsed by the Committee of Seventy gives the Mayor only four months in which to make up his mind about appointments. MUSIC.

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY. M. Cesar Thomson was to have been the sold performer at the third concert of the Philharmonic Society last night, but an injury resulting to his arm from a fall made it impossible for him to play, and so two planoforte duets by the Misses Sutro were substituted for the concerto in A minor, by Goldmark, which had been M. Thomson's selection. The programme consisted, in addition, of three overtures, "In der Natur." "Carneval," and "Otelby Dvorak, and Raff's "Lenore" symphony. The three overtures seem to have been conceived as a single work by Dr. Dvorak. At least they were announced as a "friple overture" when first performed from manuscript, at the concert with which the composer introduced himself to America. On the programme of last night's concert they were grouped under the title, "Overture-Trilogy," which is only a little more lucid than "triple overture Since the first performance referred to they have been printed by Simrock, in Berlin, but with sepaopus numbers and with no hint of their lationship. Relationship, so far as the ordinary listener is likely to find it, consists simply in the employment, in the second and third, of a pastoral phrase which is the principal subject of the first. There can be no doubt but that Dr. Dvorak was impelled to make his experiment by some sort of poetical or philosophical scheme; but what that scheme is has eluded our efforts at discovery thus far. The annotater of the original programme on which the three works were described as one, said: "This composition, which is a musical expression of the emotions awakened in Dr. Antonin Dvorak by certain aspects of the three great creative forces of the universe-nature, life and love-was conceived nearly a year ago while the composer still lived in Bohemia. The three parts of the overture are linked together by a certain underlying melodic theme. This theme recurs with the insistence of the inevitable personal note marking the reflections of a human individual, who observes and is moved by the manifold signs of the unchangeable laws of the uni-This may be clear to Dr. Dvorak, but not to us. The fact is that each of the three overtures is complete in itself in respect of form as well as emotional content, and that what is the principal subject of the first, the melody gives it its mood, becomes episodic material in the others for no evident reason. A programme might possibly be made to fit the three and link them together, but it would have but a fantastic connection with the music. The first overture is pretty and pastoral; the second, a wild orgie in tones, full of vivid colors, a sort of Rakoczy march, and very appropriately named "Carneval"; the third is dramatically delineative, and we are invited to accept it as a musical description of the murder of Desdemona. In the second overture the "idée fixe" recurs as a tender episode, for the sake of which the wild Bohemian dance is interrupted, and here, if one chooses to imagina pair of lovers sauntering into the open, and in-dulging in "murmurs made to bless," the device has pretty justification. In the third, the representative phrase becomes sinister, and seems to hold converse with the murderous Moor. The music is strikingly beautiful and effective, especially when given with such splendid spirit as was done last night. But why should a Bohemian carnival stand for life and the murder of Desdemona for love? And why, if the last overture olictures the murder of Desdemona, should a footnote appear on the planoforte arrangement on the entrance of the pastoral theme to this effect. "Scene: In the open-air"? Desdemona was not suffocated in the fields or garden. The extra-musical purposes of the composer are an entrana, and the overtures are best heard without thought of their poetical scheme or relationship. Then they will delight the majority by their vivid color, expressive harmonization and wealth of melody. The orthestra was in excellent mood, abelt deprived of its concertmaster. Mr. Arnold, who is slid of the grip, and also of the veteran flautist. Mr. Hietzel, another victim of the prevailing distemper. Mr. Seldi, too, was tremendously in carnest, and had brought more finish into the work of the orchestra than hus been hoticable at any time this season. This, however, without sacrifice of its vigorous eloquence. All the missic made appeal to Mr. Seld's predilections, and he put to the record of himself and the society a performance of the symphony which was superby throughout, and in the last act was positively exciting in its dramatic picturesquewas done last night. But why should a Bohemian

WORKMEN DIE FROM INHALING FLINT DUST Baltimore, Jan. 12 (Special).-Twelve men having died from inhaling the deadly dust made in grinding flint, the Patapaco F.int Company has closed its large mill on the Baltimore and Ohlo Railroad, thirty miles from the city. The company was indieted some time ago by the Grand Jury on the charge of maintaining a public nuisance, the dust issuing from the mills having been a serious annoyance and danger to persons compelled to be in the vicinity. As the company remedied this condition, the indictment was not pressed. The company provided its employes in the mills with the best respirators that could be procured, but the men could not be induced to keep their nostrils continually protected, and in consequence suffered from the injurious effects of inhaling the dust. The company has finally suspended operations indefinitely, rather than continue imperilling the lives of the workmen. The president of the company says that he did everything possible to protect his workmen, and even employed a man especially to watch them and try to compel them to wear the protectors, but they defied the utmost vigilance. noyance and danger to persons compelled to be
